Joe Stephens called me at about 1:30 PM to report that she ran into Charlotte and Joe Moro last night and that Charlotte told her that she and Joe had seen me cleaning up in the Park about 6 PM last night. She said to me: "That damn street department ^{just} sits there and does nothing and Robert Powell has to clean the Park!" Hopefully, when Charlotte is elected she will be able to do something about the street and park departments. Apparently Charlotte and Joe Moro were both in the Columbia Hose Company. I didn't see Charlotte, but I did see Joe.

At 3:30 PM today I walked out to the golf course. As I was passing the entrance to the General Hospital, Rob Bifano (Executive Director of the Y) was cycling into town. I didn't recognize him immediately but he did recognize me. After he passed by, he turned around and caught up with me. Very friendly. He asked if he could talk with me sometime this week. He didn't mention what he wanted to talk about but I know it's about the Gravity Shop. We agreed to meet on Thursday morning at about 10 AM. Rob Bifano cycled out to French Hill and back -- just to get some exercise, said he.

My walk out was uneventful from that point on. Just as I was at the entrance to Brookvalley, WSP came down the road and picked me up and drove me into town with him to make the afternoon deposit. I was annoyed at having to ride in the car since I had decided to walk out. Nevertheless I rode into town and back out with WSP, who had no idea that I was annoyed. At the Golf Course I had a snack and then went down to Brookvalley to pick up the
